

8. Transgression of the Laws by a batsman who has a runner

- (a) A batsman's runner is subject to the Laws. He will be regarded as a batsman except where there are specific provisions for his role as a runner.
- (b) A batsman with a runner suffers the penalty for any infringement of the Laws by his runner as though he had been himself responsible. In particular he will be out if his runner is out under any of Laws 33 (Handled the ball), 37 (Obstructing the field) or 38 (Run out).

8. Transgression of the Laws by a batsman who has a runner

- (c) When a batsman with a runner is striker he remains himself subject to the Laws and will be liable to the penalties that any infringement of them demands. Additionally, if he is out of his ground when the wicket is put down at the wicket-keeper's end, he will be out in the circumstances of Law 38 (Run out) or Law 39 (Stumped) irrespective of the position of the non-striker or of the runner.

8. Transgression of the Laws by a batsman who has a runner

- (c) If he is thus dismissed, runs completed before the dismissal shall not be scored. However, the penalty for a No ball or a Wide shall stand, together with any penalties to either side that may be awarded when the ball is dead. See Law 42.17 (Penalty runs).

8. Transgression of the Laws by a batsman who has a runner

- (d) When a batsman with a runner is not the striker:
- (i) he remains subject to Laws 33 (Handled the ball) and 37 (Obstructing the field) but is otherwise out of the game.
 - (ii) he shall stand where directed by the striker's end umpire so as not to interfere with play.
 - (iii) he will be liable to any penalties should he commit any act of unfair play.
